City and Country. Still, as in the days of Horace, the farmer praises the city, complains of hard times, short crops, bad seasons, and scarcity of money, while the denizen of the overcrowded city envies the happy and prosperous farmer. All things considered, the advantage appears to be with the farmer. According to Dr. Holland, the farmers of the West have their pockets full of money, while the tradesmen of the city are starving. How is it with the farmers of the South? How is it with our tobacco-planters? Not so well, if one may judge from their complaints; but, then, farmers are proverbial for their crosking. Tobacco has been commanding high prices, and notwithstanding the temporary lull in the market the man is fortunate who still has a good lot of it on hand. We clip from Scribner's for April the following observations of Dr. Holland contrasting the advantages of country life over that in the over-crowded cities:

"There is hardly a city in the United States which does not contain more people than can get a fair, honest living, by labor or trade, in the best times. When times of business depression come, like those through which we have passed and are passing, there is a large class that must be helped to keep them from cruel suffering. Still, the cities Richmond and Petersburg Rail-grow, while whole regions of the countryted year by year. Yet the fact is patent to-day that the only presperous class is the to-day that the only presperous class is the agricultural. We have now the anomaly of thrifty farmers and starving tradesmen. The agricultural classes of the West are prosperous. They had a good crop last year, and have received good prices for all their preducts; and while the cities are in trouble and manufactories are running on half-time, or not running atiall, the Western farmer has money in his pocket and a ready market for everything he has to sell. The country must be fed, and he feeds it. The city family may do without new clothes and a thousand luxurious appliances, but it must have bread and meat. There is nothing that can prevent the steady prosperity of the American farmer but the combinations and "corners" of middle-men, that force unnatural conditions upon the finances and markets of the country.

than the worker of the city. He is more independent; has more command of his own time; tares better at table; lodges better; and gets a better return for his labor. What is the reason, then, that the farmer's boy runs to the city the first chance he can get, and remains if he can possibly find there the means of life? "It can only be found, we believe, in the social leadness, or social starvation, of American agricultural life. . . . What is the remedy? How shall farmers manage to keep their children near them? How can we discourage the influx of unnecessarymay, burdensome-populations into the cities? We answer: By making agricultural society attractive. Fill the farm-houses with | day. periodicals and books. Establish central reading-rooms or neighborhood clubs. Encourage the social meetings of the young. Have concerts, lectures, amateur dramatic associations. Establish a bright, active, social life, that shall give some significance to lator. Above all, build as far as possible in Each seized end and end, but the moment they came in contact there was a sharp electric shock and they let go. It was raining, and the battery was strong. However, the regroes did not know where the shock come from, and tried it again. By this time they were so wet that the current would pass if the clothes of one but touched the other. Frightened and bewildered, they brought the wires together again and again; each time, to their great astonishment, an electric shock convulsed them. And when the train started there sat the operator under the shelter of the dorôt still egging the negroes to fre-h efforts.

Genre.-[From the Lancaster Intelligeneer.]-Tue rather formidable-looking word which stands at the head of this artiele, and appears as though it might mow down a long swath at a spelling-match, signities a style of artistic representation which finds its subjects in every-day life.

How Mr. BEECHER TOOK THE OATH .- Mr. Evaris: Mr. Beecher, will you be sworn? Henry Ward Beecher, the defendant, here took the witness-stand. The officer offered

Mr. Fullerton : One moment.

Mr. Beach: I object to this form of oath, sir, unless Mr. Beecher shall declare that he has conscientious scruples against swearing upon the Scriptures.

Judge Neilson: Any form that Mr.

Beecher says will bind his conscience. Mr. Beach: That is the statute, sir, that a witness shall be sworn upon the Scriptures unless he declares that he has conscientious scruples against swearing upon them. Mr. B echer: I have conscientious scruples against swearing on the Bible. Mr. Beach : Very weil.

The Clerk [to the witness]: You solemnly affirm and declare-Mr. Evarts: No. He swears; be does not athrm and declare-he swears by the uplifted hand.

Mr. Beach: By the ever-living God. Mr. Evarts: The New England fashion is to swear by the uplifted hand, but it is the oath; there is the same distinction in New England between the oath and the affirmation that there is with us. Mr. Porter: The oath is, "You swear in the presence of the ever-living God." The Clerk then read the oath to Mr.

Beecher as tollows: "You solemnly swear by the ever-living God that the evidence you shall give in this issue joined between Theodore Tilton, plaintiff, and Henry Ward Beecher shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." Mr. Beecher : I do.

Mr. Beecher, unlike any other witness who has preceded him, and with most reverential bow, his eyes cast down, answered, "I do." New York Tribune.

Bret Harte once worked for his board up in one of the Sierra valleys, but the old fel-low he lived with thinks he hardly paid his way. "Do you see that fence?" said the old way.
